DEGREE IN SOCIOLOGY

AIMS

The fundamental objective of this degree is to produce professionals with a sociology profile. Students will acquire a global knowledge of those areas related to scientific knowledge of societies, and be able to direct social, social intervention and public policy research projects and to adapt efficiently to a rapidly developing field, with the ultimate aim of contributing, together with other professionals, to a better understanding of societies and their well-being through the elaboration of explanatory frameworks for social phenomena, analysis of the principle problems, formulation of proposals for social intervention and the planning and management of public policies.

UA graduates in sociology will be qualified to work in an executive, advisory or managerial capacity within the public, private and non-profit sectors, in organisations undertaking the design, direction, control and analysis of opinion, consumer and publicity research, and as consultants and specialists in research investigating quality. They will also be equipped to work as coordinators on social intervention programmes, as specialists in social problems and as managers, planners and assessors of public policies in government, non-profit sector associations and organisations, consultancies, research institutes and offices, and voluntary bodies.

- Credit structure of the degree course
- Distribution of credits per subject type
- General description of the course programme

CREDIT STRUCTURE OF THE DEGREE COURSE

The new Sociology Degree programme comprises 240 credits. These constitute the theoretical and practical bases that the student must acquire, namely: the fundamentals of this field of knowledge, compulsory and optional subjects, seminars, practical IT experience, external practical experience, supervised projects, an independent project and a Final project.

Subjects, each worth 6 European ECTS credits, are organized into semesters. Students must take 5 subjects each semester in order to complete 30 credits and thus, 60 credits per academic year and a total of 240 credits over the four academic years.

In order to make the course compatible with other activities, students are permitted to take a part-time course consisting of 30 credits per academic year.

DISTRIBUTION OF CREDITS PER SUBJECT TYPE

SUBJECT TYPE	CREDITS
Core subjects (FB)	60
Compulsory subjects (OB)	138
Optional subjects (OP)	36
Final project	6
Total	240

GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE COURSE PROGRAMME

The Sociology Degree programme is structured around seventeen modules. This overall module-based structure guarantees greater and better coordination, permits a more flexible organisation and offers the possibility of achieving the proposed educational objectives with greater efficiency. A module is defined as an academic unit that includes several subjects which are related from a disciplinary point of view (theoretical or methodological). Thus, the subjects can be understood as integrated.

Of the modules constituting the programme, sixteen comprise subjects and their corresponding curricular contents, and one incorporates contents aimed at professional vocational training. Thus, the module "Transfer" incorporates the subjects "External practical experience" and "End of Course project". The ultimate aim of this module is to connect the student with his or her employment niche, providing supervision and help towards understanding and integrating the curricular contents acquired in a professional context.

Prior to evaluation for the final grade, the student must demonstrate competence in a foreign language. Among other forms of accreditation at the University of Alicante is to be overcome at least level B1 of the Common European Framework for modern languages, which may be raised in the future.

PROFESSIONAL PROFILES

Of the five professional profiles identified in the sub-commission for Sociology White Paper (Social Intervention, Social Research, Education, Public Policies and Organisation of work), the Degree in Sociology offered by the UA focuses on three (Social Intervention, Applied Social Research and Public Policies), as a consequence both of an attempt to adapt the course to its socio-economic setting (economic sectors and predominant areas of activity, size of organisations, information needs) and of the current academic staff's preferred areas of specialisation.

- The Social Intervention profile aims to focus on the study of old and new social problems such as inequality and social exclusion, poverty, the roots of violence and peace studies, gender differences, changes within the family, problems associated with youth and the dependent population, new types of work, the social impact of the environmental crisis, social policies and the future of the Welfare State, and the costs and opportunities arising from international migration.

- The Public Policies profile aims to prepare the sociology graduate as a specialist in the design, planning, management and assessment of public projects and programmes aimed at local and regional development, international cooperation, social intervention, cultural and tourism management, and other public policies (employment, health, town planning, environment, gender, citizen participation, etc.).

- Finally, Applied Social Research constitutes one of the most fertile and solicited fields in sociology. It centres on the design, direction, control and analysis of electoral polls and opinion and consumer surveys, the design and planning of commercial strategies and campaigns, the design, planning and management of communication strategies and campaigns, and the analysis of quality control systems through the implementation of both quantitative and qualitative techniques.

Professions for which the degree qualifies its holder

Sociologist: Applied Social Research, Social Intervention and Public Policies.

An education in sociology is also exceptionally adapted to the cognitive, personal and applied prerequisites of other professions such as journalism, publicity, labour relations, cooperation and development specialists and managers, social work, education, basic and applied research, commercialisation, personnel management, and participation in trade unions, politics and in non-profit organisations.
